Introduction

Job seekers and workers are under mounting pressure to upgrade their existing skills and learn new ones to meet the fast-changing labor market needs.

Skills training being a key component of the Lebanon Crisis Response Plan (LCRP)'s livelihoods sector since the beginning of the response to the Syrian refugee crisis, numerous NGOs offer vocational training programmes. Despite this continuous increase in the provision of non-formal skills training, only a few livelihoods sector partners are providing post-training support services. A lack of collaboration and cooperation among the livelihoods sector partners and with the government is hindering information exchange on training and training and post-training services to be shared systemically and efficiently in order to ultimately refer beneficiaries to appropriate service providers when needed.

Training and post-training services cover a wide range of support activities that may include career guidance, employment and job placement services, mentoring, support in job search tools and techniques, coaching for job interviews, but also include non-employment-related support such as psychological support, childcare services etc. There is a range of post-training service providers, but most NGOs operating under the umbrella of the Lebanon Crisis Response Plan may not know where to locate relevant service providers.

Most of these NGOs serve disadvantaged groups. In its broader sense, the term 'disadvantaged' in the labour market context encompasses the range of distinct or overlapping barriers preventing some people or groups from fully participating in employment. While some barriers may relate to core competencies or work ability, these are often coupled with non-employment-related challenges. Groups facing disadvantage in the job market often need to overcome several barriers affecting their capacity not only to seek and find employment but also to stay and progress in employment to which non-employment-related support services may be required (i.e. psychological support, child care services etc.). The strong interconnections between economic and social factors affecting the ability of vulnerable groups to find and take up jobs are shown in the chart below.

The COVID-19 pandemic and resulting economic crisis in the country have further aggravated these barriers and heightened the importance of expanding access of vulnerable groups to necessary support services to take up a job. However, despite the availability of such support services in the country, lack of institutionalized and coordinated referral system beyond humanitarian assistance, such as the Referral Information Management System (RIMS), is hindering information exchange on training and post-training services and severely limits support offered to those vulnerable groups.

The RIMS was developed by Danish Refugee Council (DRC) Lebanon in response to the need for more accountable, timely and effective multi-sector referral processes. It satisfies the call for stronger cross-sector and cross-agency systems for coordination and referral to address service gaps observed within the Lebanon response. RIMS is currently being used within the livelihood sector as a referral mechanism for humanitarian assistance available among partners (e.g. basic assistance, education, child protection, shelter, etc.). There is, therefore, a need for a referral services network for providing employment plus other support services and that also complements the services provided. Such a network is envisaged to fully support job seekers in accessing suitable employment opportunities.

In response to this need and as part of its technical support to NGOs and government institutions to improve their services in terms of vocational training programmes as well as post-training support services, the ILO aims to help local organizations navigate and maximise what support is currently available and, in the longer term, develop a referral network to further facilitate partnership and collaboration among training and post training service providers in a coordinated and systematic manner in order to ultimately improve accountability and effectiveness while also avoiding duplication. These efforts are conducted within the project "Improved access to employment opportunities for Lebanese and refugee graduates from skills training" financially supported by the Italian Agency for Cooperation Development (AICS).

The Mapping of Training and Post Training Service Providers

Within this context, the ILO contracted InfoPro to conduct a mapping of training and post training service providers. The mapping provides a roadmap of current employment and skills provision services in Lebanon and it aims to:

- Provide local authorities and Non-Governmental Organizations (NGOs) operating in Lebanon with a clear picture of what services provision is available in their local authority area and help them understand the spatial footprints that shape this provision and how this is changing;
- Support NGOs and other potential users to collaborate with government to shape provision and maximise opportunities that arise;
- Highlight key local, national, and international providers which might offer new opportunities for partnership and development.

As such, the mapping forms the first step towards development of a comprehensive, cross-sector referral services network for employment and other post-training support services which will serve as a complementary service to RIMS and any other similar platforms that exist within the country to expand the referral options to employment and non-employment-related support services.

Characteristics of the map

The map is a public document and available to everyone. The target users include NGOs, companies, individuals, job seekers or service providers.

The mapping exercise targeted all types of skills development and employment-related services providers, in-person and online, including private sector companies, local NGOs, international NGOs, governmental institutions, and social enterprises. The map provides detailed information regarding services provided by those organizations, contact information, profile of beneficiaries and target groups, and location of services. The list of training and post-training services and their definitions is provided in Table 1.

The map includes the contact information for the organizations at the time of conducting the mapping (month, year), and is subject to change. As a result, this map will be continuously updated with information related to the listed training and post-training service providers, in addition to adding new providers. Training and post-training service providers are invited to add/update their related information by contacting ILO.

General Approach and Methodology

The mapping exercise included a mix of desk research and qualitative data collection methods to identify and contact service providers and gather the necessary information.

The organizations contacted were categorized based on their business structure, goals, and mission. These categories are, Governmental Institutions, Local NGOs, International NGOs, Private Agencies, Universities, Regional Online Platforms, and International Online Job-bank.

The total number of organizations mapped by the end of this activity is 143 organization, and the below table shows in details the number of organizations contacted by each method, and under each category.

Outreach Method \ Organization Category	Government Institutions	Local NGOs	International NGOs	Private Agencies	Universities	Regional Online Platforms	International Online Job-bank	Total
Phone Interview	2	27	14	9	4	4	0	60
Online Interview	1	7	6	1	0	0	1	16

Total Number of Organizations	3	54	30	15	7	17	17	143

Challenges, limitations and corrective measures

The main challenges and limitations of the mapping were due to difficulties in contacting training and post-training service providers and accessing up-to-date information.

Challenges	Mitigation measures
Lack of and/or wrong contact information for the organizations	Reach out to InfoPro's network to collect the missing contact information and contact different persons in the organization
Lack of interest to fill all required information	Desk research conducted to collect the missing information
